

That's the solution! More regulations! I don't know how the FAA can extrapolate the unique geographical features of Hawaii to the rest of the United States and dictate that we all must conform to a set of rules that have only been tested in that unique area. This is another example of the FAA's 'big brother', 'one size fits all' attitude. The FAA's charter was to promote general aviation, not stifle it.